ОПК-1.2	10. In what way can you prove that the "freedom" of free word groups is relative and arbitrary?	a. FWGs are so called because they are each time built up anew in the speech process. But idioms are used as ready-made units with fixed and constant structures. b. The constituents of FWG may vary according to communication needs. Member-words of PU are always reproduced as single unchangeable collocations. c. The constituent red in the free word-group red flower may be substituted for by any other adjective denoting color, without essentially changing the denotational meaning of the word-group. But in the PU red tape (bureaucratic methods) no substitution like this is possible, a change of the adjective would involve a complete change in the meaning of the whole group. d. Nothing is entirely "free" in speech as its linear relationships are governed, restricted and regulated, on the one hand, by requirements of logic and common sense and, on the other hand, by the rules of grammar and combinability. In cases of substantivization of adjectives we have quite different changes in the language. Substantivization is the result of ellipsis. In cases of perfect substantivization, the attribute takes the paradigm of a countable noun. c. Yes, they should. There are wholly and partially substantivized adjectives.
